

George Washington Carver, a famous scientist, faced challenges but he made a difference anyway because he used his inner strength to help himself. When George was a child he was born a slave and his mom was kidnapped. He did get to go to college but had to work on a farm all along. As a result, he used all these challenges to become stronger. He then used what he learned in college to teach farmers how to rotate crops and use the extra peanuts they grew in over 300 ways. He finally donated his income to Tuskegee University to help others. George used his inner strength and resources to help others. Everyone faces challenges and we can all use these to become stronger.
